

2025 and Beyond: a future international development agenda for Australia

By Camilla Burkot
24 November 2016

A study being conducted by researchers at the Minerals and Energy for Development Alliance, The University of Western Australia, aims to evaluate current long term thinking around Australia's international development agenda. By exploring public opinions on Australia's role in assisting developing countries and responding to development challenges in 2025 and beyond, it is hoped that the findings will inform policy debates on Australia's international development efforts.

The online study questionnaire is open to everyone and takes about 10 minutes to complete. At the end of the questionnaire a statement of your opinion on Australian aid is generated. Participation in this study is voluntary and no identifying information will be published.

Click on this link (or copy this URL: bit.ly/28X9h9i) into your web browser to participate in the study.

About the author/s

Camilla Burkot

Camilla Burkot was a Research Officer at the Development Policy Centre, and Editor of the Devpolicy Blog, from 2015 to 2017. She has a background in social anthropology and holds a Master of Public Health from Columbia University, and has field experience in Eastern and Southern Africa, and PNG. She now works for the Burnet Institute.

Link: <https://devpolicy.org/2025-beyond-future-international-development-agenda-australia-20161124/>
Date downloaded: 1 May 2024

Australian
National University

The Devpolicy Blog is based at the Development Policy Centre, Crawford School of Public Policy, College of Asia and the Pacific, Australian National University.