Should active recruitment of health workers from sub-Saharan Africa be viewed as a crime?

Edward J Mills, William A Schabas, Jimmy Volmink, Roderick Walker, Nathan Ford, Elly Katabira, Aranka Anema, Michel Joffres, Pedro Cahn, Julio Montaner

Shortages of health-care staff are endemic in sub-Saharan Africa (table).¹ Overall, there is one physician for every 8000 people in the region. In the worst affected countries, such as Malawi, the physician-to-population ratio is just 0.02 for every 1000 (one per 50 000). There are also huge disparities between rural and urban areas: rural parts of South Africa have 14 times fewer doctors than the national average.² These numbers are very different to those in developed countries: the UK, for example, has over 100 times more physicians per population than Malawi.³ Furthermore, almost one in ten doctors working in the UK are from Africa. The insufficiency of health staff to provide even basic services is one of the most pressing impediments to health-care delivery in resource-poor settings. The consequences are clearly shown by the inverse relation that exists between health-care worker density and mortality.^{4,6} migrate within 10 years of graduation to Canada, the UK, and the USA.¹¹

In sub-Saharan Africa, nurses commonly bear the brunt of health-care delivery, but their numbers have declined substantially in recent years because of migration. In Malawi, for example, there has been a 12% reduction in available nurses due to migration.¹² In 2000, roughly 500 nurses left Ghana, double the total number of nursing graduates for that same year.¹³ The recent upsurge in migration has affected the ability of nurse training programmes to continue because of poor staffing levels.¹⁴ Death caused by infectious and chronic diseases¹⁵ is also a major contributor to nurse attrition in the region.

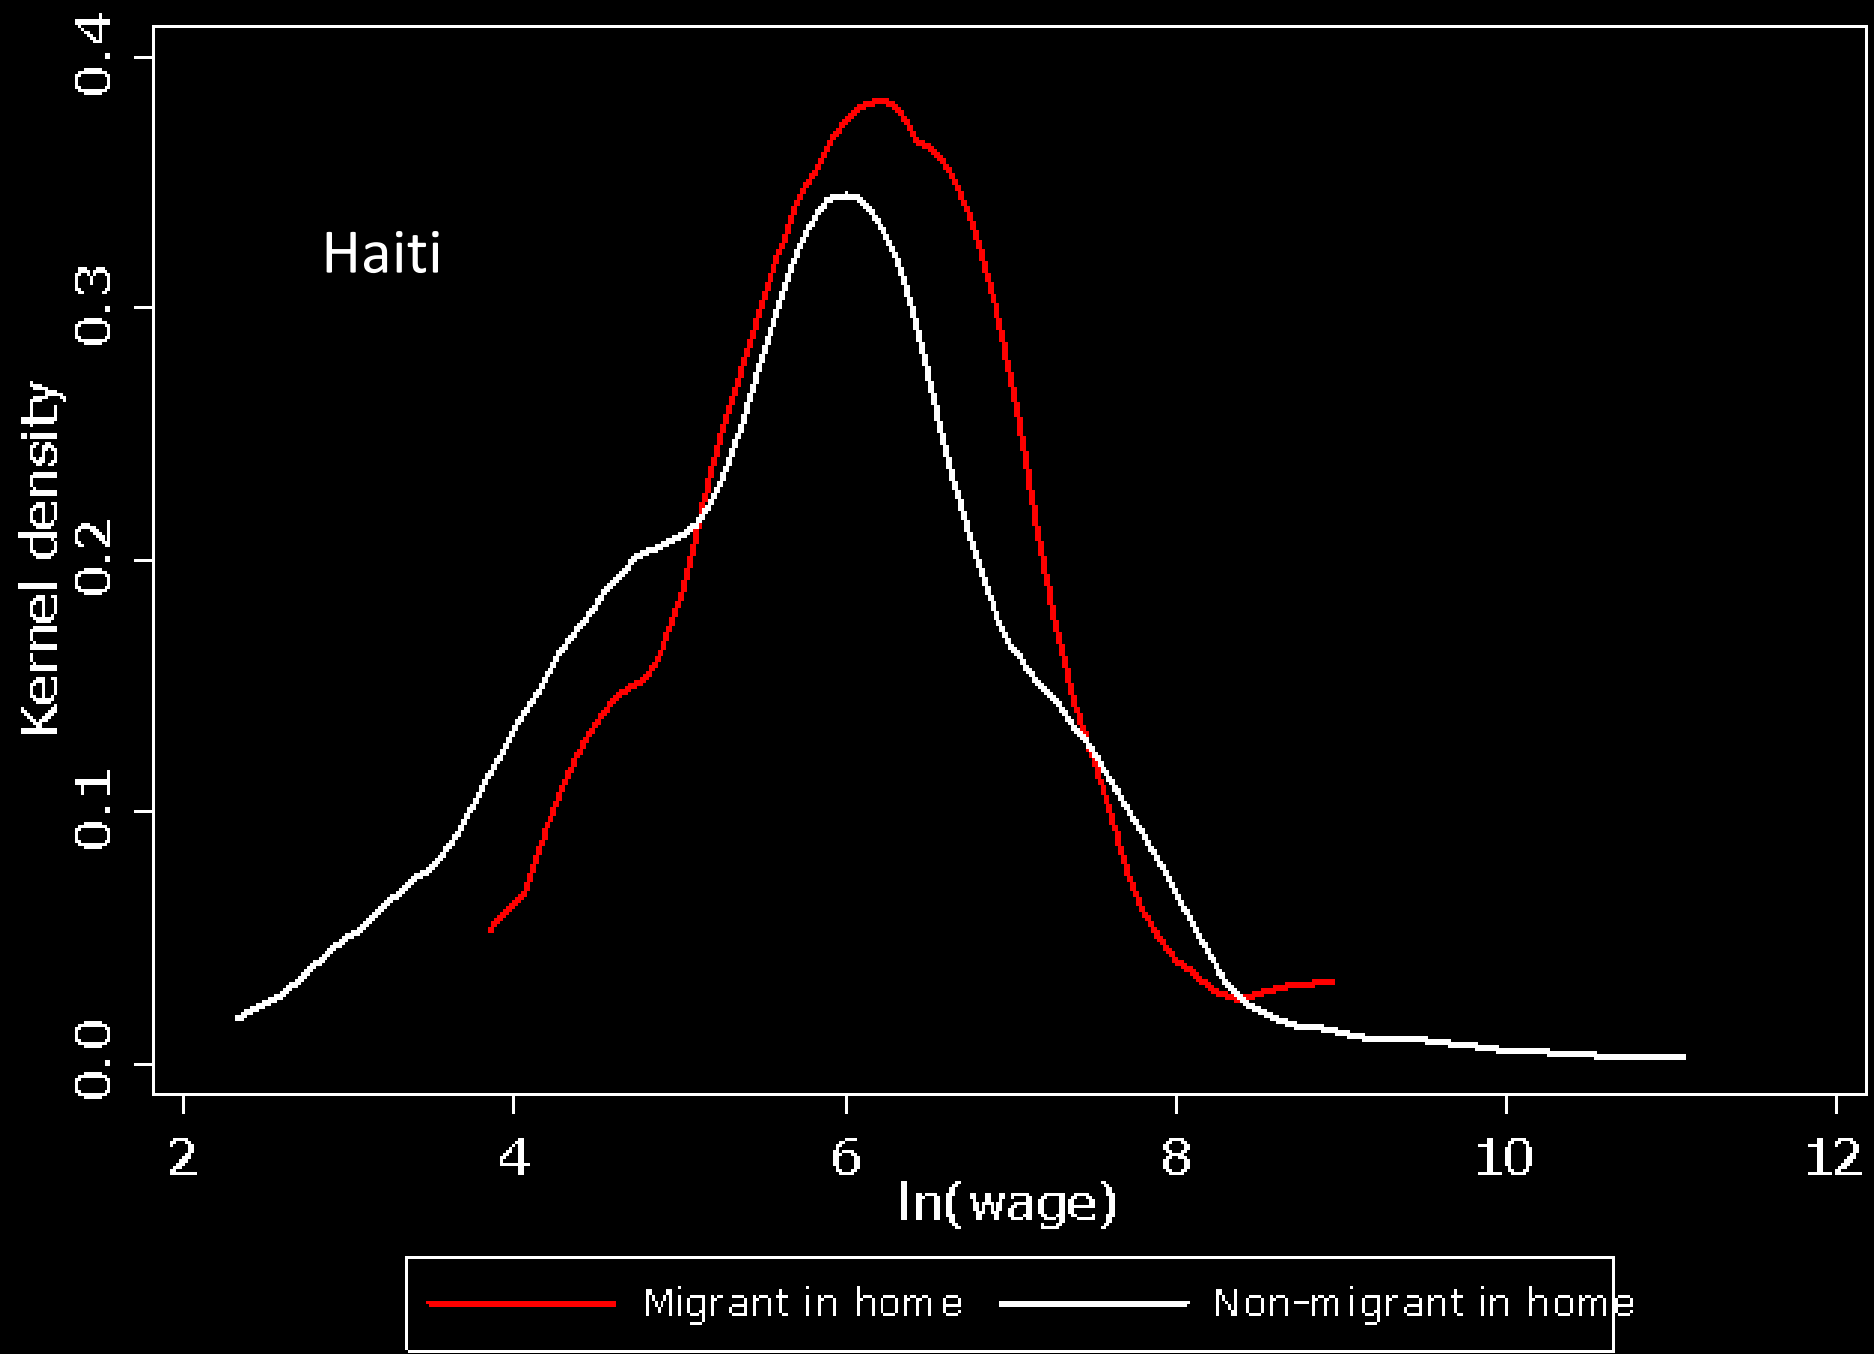

The number of pharmacists living in sub-Saharan Africa is also very low in comparison with that in many other regions of the world. Liberia has a pharmacist-to-population ratio of only one to 85 000,³ 77 times lower Doug Stanhope and other wealthy libertarian creeps giggle while we struggle to cope with the policies they support. Meanwhile, Michael Clemens takes a more smug and academic tone while arguing exactly the same point in "Let Them Leave", an article about how the solution to Haiti's problems is mass emigration to the United States. Michael Clemens doesn't care that American women will be raped and killed. Michael Clemens doesn't care that entire neighborhoods will be destroyed by third world savagery. Michael Clemens doesn't care about White people.

He probably gets a pang of revulsion at the thought of "rednecks", "hillbillies", and "white trash" rejecting his enlightened solution to third world poverty: Give them America. He doesn't just want our money and he doesn't just want to assist with the natural disaster. He wants to enslave us to them - in perpetuity. He wants to give them our jobs, our homes, and our communities. He wants to instruct our women to remain barren and load them up with the rest of the world's children. He wants to see White Americans cuckolded on an epic global scale.

Michael Clemens, Harvard alumnus social engineer EXPERT, doesn't intend to put his proposal to a vote. You can tell from the comments on the page how well that would fly. He's even jumped into the comments to offer his arrogant and indignant reaction to his cognitive inferiors. He has no use for democracy or "the will of the people". He's an enlightened despot, a philosopher king. But he's not just king of a mere country; he and his technocratic think tank pals are kings of the world! He surveys his global domain, redistributing the wealth of one group of working folks to another to appease his big fancy abstract vision of social justice.

I say that we let HIM leave. Let Michael Clemens leave this leper colony of unenlightened xenophobic rubes and take his moral teachings directly to the red-eyed street gangs of Haiti. I don't wish ill against the people of Haiti, I don't even object to foreign aid when it's apolitical assistance in the immediate wake of a crippling disaster. But shipping every horde of disaster victims to our neighborhoods is hysterically stupid. It would be as suicidally idiotic as taking the first monstrously huge homeless guy you find on the street and taking him into your home to live with your young teenage daughter. Of course, that's just the kind of thing Doug Stanhope, Michael Clemens, Barack Obama, Hollywood, and the rest of these jackals would find heartwarming.

If your your heart (or daughter) has been touched by the flood of third world immigration that Michael Clemens and his co-conspirators have wrought, take a moment to share your experience with him: mclemens@cgdev.org.
