

Australian aid stakeholder survey now closed with 358 responses

by Jonathan Pryke
3 September 2013

The Australian aid stakeholder survey has now closed. The survey is our attempt at setting up a new feedback mechanism for evaluating the performance of Australian aid. You can read more about the objectives of it in this blog post.

The first phase of our survey, launched in the middle of June, was a closed survey targeting pre-identified members of the development contractor and Australian NGO communities. We received a total of 105 responses – a respectable 73% of our sample frame.

The second phase of our survey, launched in the middle of July, was a public survey where all other interested stakeholders were welcome to participate. We received a total of 243 responses.

That brings our total responses to 358, making this one of the largest such surveys worldwide. Thanks to all who took part, and we look forward to sharing the results with you.

Author/s:

Jonathan Pryke

Jonathan Pryke worked at the Development Policy Centre from 2011, and left in mid-2015 to join the Lowy Institute, where he is now Director of the Pacific Islands Program. He has a Master of Public Policy/Master of Diplomacy from Crawford School of Public Policy and the College of Diplomacy, ANU.

Link:

<https://devpolicy.org/australian-aid-stakeholder-survey-now-closed-with-358-responses-20130903/>