

Devpol Annual Appeal 2023

by Development Policy Centre

8 May 2023

The Development Policy Centre is a critical source for research and expertise on aid and development. Our work is particularly important at a time when countries in our region and around the world, as well as the international development system itself, are facing so many profound challenges.

An important part of our work is the Devpolicy Blog which is a key source of thinking on Papua New Guinea and the Pacific islands region, and a platform for researchers, practitioners and development actors to share their views and experiences. It provides an accessible evidence-base for policymaking and development practice in the region, as well as a platform for debate and news.

We need your continued support to keep playing this important role in the region.

If you value the Devpolicy Blog and its role in fostering robust discussion on aid and development in Australia, the Pacific, and beyond, please consider making a tax-deductible gift as part of our annual appeal to help us continue our mission to publish quality analysis:

GIVE NOW

Your support will allow us to maintain our editorial independence and to pursue opportunities to evolve and expand the Devpolicy Blog.
