

Fortnightly links: Guantanamo's 'darkest secret', development tropes, Philippine water crisis, and more

Credit: Human Rights Watch

by Terence Wood and Sachini Muller

26 April 2019

Ben Taub reports on Guantanamo's 'darkest secret', providing a damning indictment of the War on Terror.

Andrew Leigh spoke at a Devpolicy event recently on how a Labor government will tackle tax avoidance in Australia and the region, and announced a new policy initiative to help crack down on multinational tax avoidance and restore fairness into the system. Read his speech or listen to the podcast.

Carine Umuhumuza for Devex on how development tropes have failed us.

The Telegraph sat down with Dr Matshidiso Moeti, the first woman to lead the World Health Organization's Regional office for Africa, who has instigated reforms of the once-inefficient organisation.

Is poor governance behind the Philippine water crisis? Agnes Rola writes for East Asia Forum.

Vox reports on a new paper by the National Bureau of Economic Research which looks at the costs of encouraging people not to drink from wells contaminated with arsenic in Bangladesh in the early 2000s, pointing out that the alternatives — e.g. surface water contaminated with waterborne diseases — were worse.

Author/s:

Terence Wood

Terence Wood is a Fellow at the Development Policy Centre. His research focuses on political governance in Western Melanesia, and Australian and New Zealand aid.

Sachini Muller

Sachini Muller was a Research Officer at the Development Policy Centre. She is currently completing a Master of Globalisation at ANU.

Link: <https://devpolicy.org/fortnightly-links-20190426/>