

Fortnightly links: global poverty, non-violent protest, vaccine trial, pro-aid ad, and more

By Camilla Burkot and Terence Wood
5 May 2017

Max Rosser has a great primer on global poverty.

A joint investigation by Univision and seven Latin American media outlets reveals deep, systemic injustices in the public defense institutions in the region.

Bloggingheads has a fascinating discussion on the efficacy of non-violent protest and whether it might have worked in Syria.

In an op-ed, Neil Howard of the University of Antwerp challenges what he sees as misrepresentations of voluntary child labour as trafficking.

Last week, coinciding with World Malaria Day (April 25), the World Health Organization announced a three-country field trial of the most promising malaria vaccine to date. Commencing in 2018, the trial will test the RTS,S vaccine in 360,000 children under the age of 2 in Ghana, Malawi and Kenya.

A post on the Just Giving blog reports the results of an interesting informal experiment involving signing up for 100 charity email lists.

“What has aid ever done for anyone?” A clever new pro-aid ad from Save the Children UK, based on the \(in\)famous Monty Python sketch.

About the author/s

Camilla Burkot

Camilla Burkot was a Research Officer at the Development Policy Centre, and Editor of the Devpolicy Blog, from 2015 to 2017. She has a background in social anthropology and holds a Master of Public Health from Columbia University, and has field experience in Eastern and Southern Africa, and PNG. She now works for the Burnet Institute.

Terence Wood

Terence Wood is a Fellow at the Development Policy Centre. His research focuses on political governance in Western Melanesia, and Australian and New Zealand aid.

Link:

<https://devpolicy.org/fortnightly-links-global-poverty-nonviolent-protest-vaccine-trial-pro-aid-ad-more-20170505/>

Date downloaded: 5 May 2024

Australian
National University

The Devpolicy Blog is based at the Development Policy Centre, Crawford School of Public Policy, College of Asia and the Pacific, Australian National University.