We are very pleased to announce the inaugural Harold Mitchell development policy lecture on Thursday November 22nd. This series of annual lectures has been created to provide a new forum in Australia at which the most pressing development issues can be addressed by the best minds and most influential practitioners of our time.

Emilia Pires has been Finance Minister of Timor-Leste since 2007, and is the founding chair of the g7+, a grouping of fragile states. The Minister will discuss the development prospects of Timor-Leste and the importance of the g7+ group and the New Deal for Engagement in Fragile States, which the g7+ has authored.

Harold Mitchell AC is founder of the Harold Mitchell Foundation and Chairman, Aegis Media, Australia and New Zealand. He will inaugurate the lecture series.

Don't miss this important event. Register quickly here, as the lecture will reach full capacity fast.

Careers in development

The current generation of young Australians shows an unprecedented interest in international development. But how to get started? In this new Devpolicy discussion paper (and accompanying blog) Jonathan Pryke has tried to answer this question with advice on what a career in development actually is, what you can do to better your chances of getting started and where you can look.

PNG budget project survey about to commence

As part of our PNG budget project (Promoting Effective Public Expenditure) being conducted with PNG's NRI, we are conducting a nationwide survey of some 400 schools and health centres. The survey teams were trained last week, and the survey itself commences this week and will run through till mid-November. The survey will update results first collected in 2002 as part of an NRI and World Bank project (reported here), and will fill critical data gaps about the progress (or lack of it) made over the last decade in the delivery of government services, during which the resources boom has tripled PNG government revenue, and a number of important expenditure reforms have been undertaken.

We also welcome Grant Walton as the latest addition to the ANU PNG Budget Project team. Grant is working on the survey. He recently finished his PhD at the University of Melbourne, which compared policy maker and citizens' perspectives on corruption in PNG.

New events page

Over the past two years we have hosted a total of 41 public events (a combination of lectures, discussions and forums). Most of these events have been filmed, and many have related blogs and articles written about them. To give you better access to these great resources we have brought them together and cataloged them on our new events page. Videos of our last two events – Owen Barder on the role of development think tanks and Steven Rood and Mr Jaime Faustino on the political economy of reforms in the Philippines – will be available shortly. Our engaging business in development forum is on this Wednesday (October 17).
